Boston police are asking for the public's help to track down a man they say is a suspect in a fatal Brighton shooting.

Police on Tuesday night identified Gammada Musa, 25, of Brighton, in the shooting death of Desmond Joseph on Oct. 22.

Musa is described as a black man, about 5-feet-10 and 195 pounds. Police implore people to call if they spot him. He is to be considered armed and dangerous.

Authorities believe that Musa shot and killed Desmond Joseph near 124 Teleford Street.

Universalhub.com reported Musa was convicted for his role in a mass stomping of a couple in North Allston in 2009. Musa, 19 at the time, was one of the two men and a woman who were arrested on charges of unarmed robbery, assault and battery and assault and battery by means of a dangerous weapon.

Musa was charged with breaking and entering in February and was charged with breaking into a car in September.

Bella Bond case should

The child who had been known as "Baby Doe" after her body was found at Deer Island should have been kept on DCF's radar, according to a report released Wednesday.

SPENCER BUELL

The child who had been known as "Baby Doe" after her body was found at Deer Island in June should have been kept on DCF's radar in the months leading up to her death, according to a report released Wednesday, which called the closure of her child welfare case in 2013 "premature."

The state Office of the Child Advocate had been reviewing the Department of Children and Families' contact with Bond and her family. Two DCF cases involving the child, one in 2012 and 2013, had been closed before Bond's death, the report said.

"Given the long history and totality of factors, DCF should not have closed the case at the end of the assessment" in 2013, the report found.

The infant's mother, 40-year-old Rachelle Bond, and her boyfriend, Michael McCarthy, 35, were being held in connection with her death. McCarthy had been charged with murder, Bond with helping cover up the child's death. They were due back in court Nov. 19.

"[T]his review reinforces the safety and well-being of a child is the shared responsibility of the family, community and entities responsible for providing assistance to children and families," the report said. It was "not intended to place blame," according to the report's authors, a group independent of the DCF.

But the seven-page document outlined the number of ways the OCA believe the state's involvement with the Bond family went wrong.

The DCF did not adequately collect information about Bond and assess risks to the child, the report found. Bond had a lengthy criminal record and history of drug use and mental illness. The state had previously taken custody of two of her children, born a decade before Bella.

> "Given the long history and totality of factors, DCF should not have closed the case at the end of the assessment."
> Office of the Child Advocate

Instead, investigators relied too heavily on Bond's own statements and the outward impression of a happy family and a mother on the right path, the report found. There were "mixed messages," the report said.

Information in the Bond family's file was also out-of-date — much of it had been "cut-andpasted from prior years," according to the report. Caseworkers reviewing the Bond family did not consider, for example, that Bond and her daughter were about to leave a shelter and move to an apartment on their own, and wouldn't have known when McCarthy, reportedly also a drug user, moved in, the report found.

"Within 20 months, her old patterns re-emerged and things fell apart, and no one from the community was watching out for Bella," according to the report.

Bond's last contact with the state was in October 2014, the report found. The DCF received reports of neglect in 2012 and 2013, but hadn't received any since then.

In June, Bella Bond was found dead.

"The horrific death and tragic life of 2-year-old Bella reminds us all of our responsibility to be watchful and to say something to authorities if a helpless child is mistreated," said Acting Child Advocate Linda Carlisle in a statement when the investigation began. "Children under the age of 5 may not be able to communicate their experiences, and may not be visible in the community because they aren't in day care or in school. They are especially vulnerable and require the vigilance of the entire community."

Individuals came to pay their respects to young Bella Bond at the memorials near the scene on Deer Island where her body was found months ago. At top left is Michael McCarthy and Rachelle Bond, bottom left. NICOLAUS CZARNECKI; FILE PHOTOS

The report includes recommendations for the DCF, saying it needed to ramp up investigations of parents with a history of losing children to state custody, update standards for deciding whether a case is "high risk," label how old information is in reports and update policies for analyzing parents with histories of drug use.

Three migrants drown, Greek coast guard rescues 242 others as boat sinks

At least three migrants drowned and the Greek coast guard rescued 242 others when their wooden boat sank north of the island of Lesbos on Wednesday, authorities said.

"We do not have a picture of how many people may be missing yet," a coast guard spokeswoman said.

Three people — two small boys and a man — were found drowned, and an extensive search was underway in the area.

Lesbos, which lies less than 6.2 miles from the Turkish coast in the north Aegean Sea, has been a primary gateway for thousands of migrants entering the European Union's outermost border this year.

More than 500,000 refugees and migrants have entered Greece through its outlying islands this year, in what has become the biggest humanitarian crisis on the continent in decades.

Ex-House Speaker Hastert pleads guilty

Hastert was Republican who led the House of Representatives from 1999 to 2007.

Former Republican Speaker of the House Dennis Hastert arrives at the Dirksen Federal Courthouse on Wednesday in Chicago, Illinois.

Former U.S. House Speaker Dennis Hastert pleaded guilty on Wednesday to a federal financial crime in a hush-money case stemming from allegations of sexual misconduct, marking the dramatic downfall of a once powerful politician.

In exchange for the guilty plea, federal prosecutors recommended a sentence of zero to six months imprisonment, although the judge could sentence Hastert to up to five years in prison and fine him $250,000.

Hastert, 73, pleaded guilty to one count of "structuring" — withdrawing funds from bank accounts in amounts below $10,000 to evade bank reporting rules on large cash movements. Those rules exist to detect money laundering.

Hastert told U.S. District Judge Thomas Durkin that he knew that what he was doing was wrong. "I didn't want them to know how I intended to spend the money," he said, reading from a brief statement during a hearing in the federal courthouse in Chicago that lasted a little over 20 minutes.

In the agreement, Hastert admitted to paying $1.7 million in cash to someone he had known for decades to buy that person's silence and compensate for past misconduct toward that individual.

Prosecutors did not spell out what the misconduct was, but unnamed law enforcement officials have told media that it was sexual and involved someone Hastert knew when he was a high school teacher and coach in his hometown of Yorkville, Illinois, in the 1960s and 1970s.

Hastert, flanked by two attorneys, stood before the judge and answered a series of questions to indicate that he understood what he was doing. He spoke loudly and clearly at the judge's request.

His lawyers will likely not call witnesses at his sentencing hearing, to avoid opening the door to potentially embarrassing information from his past, according to a defense attorney who has handled similar cases.

Spacewalkers prep station for space taxi parking spots

Two U.S. astronauts wrapped up nearly seven hours of electrical work and maintenance chores outside the International Space Station on Wednesday, part of a continuing upgrade to prepare the outpost for commercial space taxis.

Station commander Scott Kelly and flight engineer Kjell Lindgren left the station's airlock around 8:30 a.m. Eastern time, the first spacewalk for both astronauts.

NASA had hoped to have the station outfitted with two new berthing slips before the end of the year so that commercial space taxis under development by Boeing and privately owned Space Exploration Technologies, or SpaceX, would have places to park.

Scott Kelly moves along the space station's truss structure. NASA

But the first docking adapter was lost in a botched SpaceX Dragon cargo run in June.

"We haven't been able to do everything we hoped we would," Kenneth Todd, station operations integration manager, told reporters last week.

Still, NASA expects to have the docking ports ready before Boeing and SpaceX are ready to begin test flights of their crewed capsules in 2017, Todd added.

Picking up work from NASA's last spacewalks nearly eight months ago, Kelly and Lindgren set up electrical and data cables that will be needed for the new docking ports.

The first docking adapter now is expected to reach the station in early 2016.

NASA is working on getting a replacement for the equipment lost in June and hopes to have it aboard the station in April 2017, Todd said.

As Obama weighed patrol to counter China, Pentagon urged faster action

U.S.S. Lassen transits in formation with ROKS Sokcho during exercise east of the Korean Peninsula in March. U.S. NAVY

Washington's caution also caused disquiet among some military officials in Japan and the Philippines, both U.S. security allies.

The U.S. naval challenge to China's territorial assertiveness in the South China Sea this week came after months of frustration within the Pentagon at what some defense officials saw as unnecessary delays by the White House and State Department in approving the mission.

As early as mid-May, the Pentagon was considering sending military aircraft and ships to assert the principle of freedom of navigation around China's artificial islands in the Spratly archipelago after Defense Secretary Ash Carter requested options to respond to their rapid construction.

That patrol eventually took place Tuesday when the U.S.S. Lassen, a guided-missile destroyer, sailed within 12 nautical miles of Subi Reef, triggering an angry rebuke from China and threatening to ratchet up tensions between the world's two biggest economies.

An intense, prolonged internal U.S. debate over the patrol revealed by Reuters' reporting appears to contradict Washington's insistence that it was simply another routine freedom-of-navigation operation.

The months leading up to the patrol allowed Beijing to harden its stance and, according to some U.S. officials and security experts, blew the operation out of proportion.

The Pentagon and U.S. military officials had been ready for months to carry out patrols, but ran into "repeated stalling" from the White House and State Department, said one U.S. defense official, who requested anonymity.

Both wanted to avoid giving the appearance that any operation was in response to other events, the official said, such as the breach of 21 million U.S. personnel records that has been linked to hackers in China. China has denied involvement in the attack.

The State Department did not respond officially to queries on why the mission took so long. The White House declined to comment on the criticism.

Pressure for action was growing at a sensitive time in U.S.-China relations, as major powers moved closer to agreeing a nuclear deal with Iran and as Washington prepared for a state visit by Chinese President Xi Jinping in September.

By late September, a consensus had been reached to go ahead with the patrol, despite Xi's assertion in Washington that China had "no intention" to militarize the islands.

Obama, who has sought to avoid confrontations with U.S. rivals and reduce direct U.S. involvement in wars, had to carefully weigh the need to take action with the risks of sparking an unintentional armed conflict that could have severe diplomatic and economic consequences. REUTERS

"The concern was that if we looked like we were responding to something the Chinese had done, it would undermine our assertion that this is a matter of international law and our rights to navigate the seas."

Khloe Kardashian kind of mad at People magazine right now

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

There's this interview with Khloe Kardashian in People where she basically says that even though she and Lamar Odom have called off their divorce, it doesn't mean they're actually back together. Except Kardashian herself takes issue with it since most of the interview happened before Odom's collapse. "My People cover, I shot and interviewed for prior to all the events that happened," she clarified on Twitter. "I had to do a follow-up five-minute phoner after the events only because I was contracted to. I canceled my book tour to avoid this attention." Huh. It's not like a Kardashian to avoid attention.

So what was it the magazine printed that she take such issue with? Probably this: "There are too many other important things, too many medical things. It's not even in our brains thinking about us as a couple or having a relationship right now."

No really, Emma Stone and Andrew Garfield broke up

I guess Emma Stone and Andrew Garfield really are never, ever, ever getting back together. Hollywood's coolest couple, who have been "on a break" for most of the year, have apparently just up and officially broken up. Like, a couple of months ago. So how do we know this? Because Garfield, who is filming in Sydney, was spotted by a fan leaving a bar with a mystery woman on his arm — and who doesn't love a good mystery woman? When the fan shouted, "Where's Emma Stone?" Garfield apparently responded, "We're not together anymore," according to KIIS FM. Oh. Well, I suppose that settles that. I'll understand if you need a minute.

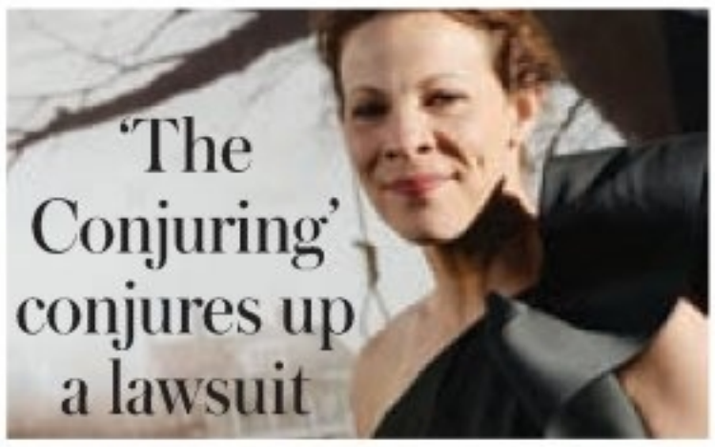
Blake Shelton thinks his divorce is hilarious

Good news, folks. Blake Shelton is totally fine with people making jokes about his divorce from Miranda Lambert. In fact, he's totally ready for them. "This year's going to be awkward at the CMA's, speaking of jokes," he tells Seth Meyers. "There's got to be one about me and Miranda. Brad Paisley is not doing his job if he doesn't look down there and go, 'Ha ha!' You have to address the elephant in the room. We've had conversations like, 'OK, dude, I'll sit there and let you kick me in the face a few times.' I know it's coming." If only that were literal, I might actually watch the CMA's.

'The Conjuring' conjures up a lawsuit



The family that lives in the Rhode Island farmhouse depicted in 2013's "The Conjuring" is now suing Warner Bros. because the attention the movie has brought them has made life less than awesome. "The biggest fear is that every day we live with the fact that we don't know what may happen," Norma Sutcliffe tells "CBS This Morning."

"We've had harassing phone calls in the middle of the night. They've had discussions about destroying the house because it's so full of evil. It's a violation of our privacy, but they think they have the right to do it." Sutcliffe and her husband are seeking damages and a state-of-the-art security system. Which, fine, but can we talk for a sec about how awesome "The Conjuring" was?

Drama in the girls' locker room

Alex Lonati stars as Reba and Stephanie Recio as Amy in "Dry Land." ALL PHOTOS PAUL FOX

Friendship, fear and abortion are some of the topics explored in "Dry Land."

NICK DUSSAULT
@MetroBOS
letters@metro.us

Company One's "Dry Land" feels like an after-school special, though the language and visuals of this tale of a do-it-yourself abortion certainly wouldn't fly in an afternoon TV minidrama of days gone by.

Part of the problem with 21- year-old playwright Ruby Rae Spiegel's production is that the lead character, Amy (Stephanie Recio), is a cardboard cutout of the quintessential mean girl. The pregnant teen is a brash bully in a sad situation, but there's almost no back story to give you a reason to care. The world of contemporary teens is no stranger to theater, but you need a bit of authentic vulnerability to elicit at least some empathy.

The story takes place almost entirely in the girl's locker room of a Florida high school gym, where Amy is a member of the swim team. As it opens she has enlisted teammate, but clearly not close friend, Ester (Eva Hughes) in an exercise aimed at terminating her pregnancy. Between punches in the stomach and exploration of other options (douching with peroxide, drinking laundry detergent, falling down the stairs), the two begin to connect on a deeper level.

There is an incredibly graphic scene that might be off-putting to some, though it does depict the horrors of DIY abortion up close. But the plodding storyline and the underdeveloped characters leave you thinking more about the holes in the production than the real issue.

Return of the living 'Dead'

Bruce Campbell and Sam Raimi are back in gory action with "Ash vs. Evil Dead."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Bruce Campbell's Ash is back in "Ash vs. Evil Dead," which begins Saturday, Oct. 31, at 9 p.m. on Starz. STARZ

For years, Bruce Campbell and Sam Raimi shot down the idea of a fourth "Evil Dead." The low budget, super-gory and increasingly silly horror series was how they made their name. "The Evil Dead," which came out in 1981, was made on the fly as a guerrilla no-budget affair. They've both moved on to bigger and sometimes even better things: Campbell to shows like "The Adventures of Brisco County, Jr." and "Burn Notice," Raimi to the "Spider-Man" films and dramas like "A Simple Plan." But they eventually changed their minds. "Ash vs. Evil Dead," which catches back up with Campbell's one-handed demon-killer Ash, bows Halloween night on Starz, telling another tale of undead-fighting, this time over 10 episodes. Raimi, who directed the first episode, and Campbell sat down with us.

You two spent a long time shooting down the idea of returning to "Evil Dead," then recanted. What convinced you two to return?

Campbell: It was the idea of doing the character after you've had 25 years of experience. That's a lot for me. I can fix Ash now. I can make him act better. Ash is a much better actor now.

You don't look back on your early "Evil Dead" performances fondly?

Campbell: I can watch about half of "The Evil Dead" and then on. I can't really watch the first half of "The Evil Dead." It's only after the misery's really set in that you can really see on my face that I wasn't acting anymore. Then it's fine. Then it worked. Whenever I had to pretend, it wasn't working.

So you can basically watch your acting evolution over the course of the movies you were in.

Campbell: No question about it. Part of doing this is I wanted to erase everyone's image of me. [Does a whiny voice] "Oh, you're so well-known as Ash — that's what you're known for." Right — I'm 21, I don't know how to act, that's what I'm known for. Great. So I will flood the Internet with better performances of Ash, and they'll forget about the early stuff.

Everyone's a critic

The films weren't originally well-received. The tide has completely turned. They're critical darlings now.

Campbell: "Army of Darkness" is on American Movie Classics now. It bombed.

Raimi: And Universal wouldn't release it for six months, then they recut it against my will. No one really liked it when it came out. So they really did age well. Plus, it works!

Campbell: I think we may get a little help from nostalgia. They may be seeing it through rose-colored glasses when they watch it. [Does a whiny voice] "This makes me feel like I'm in high school again!"

Raimi: That's him imitating you guys.

It's interesting that it wound up as a show on a premium cable channel like Starz.

Campbell: Could you imagine this on cable? It would suck. The chainsaw would start to go into the demon's neck, then you'd cut to a commercial. Nobody realizes why there are cliffhangers on a TV show. You have to have these cutaways for commercials, and you have to do it four times, otherwise the ad guys get pissed off. You have to write these bogus structural things because of ads.

Youth Lagoon embraces the dark side

The band's Trevor Powers reveals how he turns destructive thoughts and anxiety into music for the masses.

EMILY LAURENCE
emily.laurence@metro.us

Trevor Powers, aka Youth Lagoon, is a goldmine of helpful information. He knows how to cure the hiccups ("put a straw in your mouth sideways and drink a full glass of water"), can hold his own in a debate about GMOs and can hunt down an online Venetian shop that sells really cool gold masks. The last was used in Youth Lagoon's new "Highway Patrol Stun Gun" video, in which Powers wanders around New York City with a man wearing the mask.

"It was $100, a little more than I wanted to pay for it, but it's so badass," he says, calling from his hometown of Boise, Idaho. "I freaked out when I found it."

While Powers says the video is open to interpretation, to him the meaning is quite profound and was inspired by the death of his close friend. "When there's someone in your life that you're really close to, they become a part of you," he says. "It's like [that person] is a different aspect to your personality. You imagine what you would do without them, and then suddenly they're gone." To him, the man in the gold mask represents his friend, who is still a part of him. "Making the video was very cathartic and freeing," he says.

New members, new sound

His bandmates are all completely new to Youth Lagoon, but Powers has known them all for years, which he says makes playing live much easier because they are good at reading each other's cues. One is actually his brother-in-law, which Powers says makes for a "hilarious dynamic."

Confronting anxiety head on Youth Lagoon's music has always veered on the dark side, and the new album, "Savage Hills Ballroom," is no different. But it feels more personal as Powers' voice is more pronounced this time around. Along with social issues such as police brutality, some of his songs talk about personal issues, like coping with anxiety.

"A couple years ago, it was very destructive for me, and I didn't know how to file those [types of] thoughts away. So I let them rule me," Powers says. "I've learned a healthy way now to cope with anxiety. I picture my brain with filing cabinets, and when I see that a thought is going to be destructive, I just file it away."

Looking forward

Still, Powers is never worried he'll run out of material to write about. "Those destructive thoughts will always exist and still take over my subconscious," he says. "Being someone who is influenced by the darker side of life rather than the lighter side, the darker side is always very, very present."

INSIGHTGUIDES.COM TRAVEL WEEKLY, BOSTON, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 29, 2015

Rwanda: Wild adventures in a land of misty mountains

With mountain gorilla numbers climbing and big cats making a comeback, Rwanda's conservationists have plenty to celebrate. This African nation is becoming an ecotourism success story.

As anyone who's made the muddy, misty trek through Rwanda's Volcanoes National Park will tell you, your first encounter with mountain gorillas is an experience you'll never forget. Their similarity to humans is so uncanny, it's impossible not to smile. As you watch them stretch, yawn, hug their inquisitive youngsters and munch casually on sticks of wild celery, all feelings of exhaustion and anxiety ebb away in favor of fascination, kinship and awe.

This December, it will be 30 years since Californian primatologist Dian Fossey, of "Gorillas in the Mist" fame, paid for her dedication to these endangered creatures with her life. Remarkably, Rwanda's peaceful, shaggy-furred primates went on to survive the 1994 human genocide and its aftermath, but with their habitat squeezed by human population growth, their survival still hangs in the balance.

Nonetheless, experts are quietly optimistic. The number of gorillas in Rwanda remains below 500 but has climbed by over 25 percent since 2003. In September, the annual Kwita Izina naming ceremony for baby gorillas born in Volcanoes National Park honored a record 24 healthy new arrivals.

But is it safe to visit? Travel operators certainly believe so. Leaving the horrors of the 1990s firmly in the past, Rwanda has reinvented itself as a forward-looking, harmonious nation where tourists are warmly welcomed. English has become the common language, excellent roads swoop over the hills, and swank ecolodges are popping up, with Nyungwe Forest Lodge (Newmarkhotels.com) setting the bar high.

A couple of days in Rwanda makes an exciting add-on to an East African safari, and dynamic local operators such as Thousand Hills Expeditions (Thousandhillsexpeditions.com) can arrange longer made-to-order tours in quality vehicles, with guides who know their homeland inside out.

Nyungwe Forest is a stronghold for wild chimpanzees, and Akagera National Park is the site of an ambitious big cat re-introduction project.

To find out more about touring Rwanda, visit Rwandatourism.com.

Don't miss

- Volcanoes National Park: Tracking mountain gorillas in the Virunga Mountains can be physically demanding, but the experience is unforgettable. Funds raised from permits ($750 per person) help support conservation and community projects.
- Nyungwe Forest National Park: Guides offer chimpanzee and monkey treks in this vast montane rainforest, rich in tree ferns, orchids and butterflies. There's also an exhilarating canopy walk to explore.
- Akagera National Park: This once-neglected area of woodland and savanna is a safari destination to watch. This year, lions were re-introduced, and black rhinos will be next. It's hoped the lions will produce cubs by 2016.

Pats get the suddenly hot Dolphins on a short week

The Patriots are looking to move to 7-0 tonight.

JAMES TOSCANO
@Jimmy_Toscano
sports@metro.us

So, the Dolphins have won their last two games and all of a sudden they're a real threat to the Patriots?

Fine, we'll play along just for the sake of argument.

Miami, which had lost three straight to the Jaguars, Bills, and Jets, has rebounded nicely after firing Joe Philbin and hiring their tight ends coach, Dan Campbell, to replace him. Since Philbin's ousting there has been a 38-10 win over the Titans and a 44-26 win over Bill O'Brien's Texans. But that win over the Texans could say more about the Texans than it does the Dolphins. And the Patriots are not the Texans, folks. The Patriots aren't going into Miami, either.

This is a Dolphins team heading into Foxborough for a Thursday night game (8:25 p.m., CBS and NFL Network).

Tom Brady has yet to lose on a Thursday in his career (8-0). He's also never lost a meaningful home game to the Dolphins (he was pulled after the first quarter of the team's 2005 Week 17 game, a Pats loss).

1 Miami surge

It sure sounds like the team just enjoys playing for Campbell over Philbin. The personnel is the same, but listening to these Dolphins players the last couple of weeks you can sense an attitude change within. And according to Bill Belichick, they've "simplified" the playbook.

"The number of the things they're running, like the number of calls that they have, it appears to be definitely a lot less than what it was before," Belichick said. "And so they're trying to, I'd say it looks like they're doing fewer things than they've done, they're doing them better, they're playing faster, they're more aggressive, and so it looks like they've cut back the scheme a little bit defensively for higher execution."

Rob Ninkovich registers a sack on Miami quarterback Ryan Tannehill last season. GETTY IMAGES

2 Watch Suh and co.

From one dangerous defensive line to the next. Brady and the Patriots' offensive line survived the Jets, but the Dolphins won't prove to be any easier. And don't forget cheap-shot artist Ndamukong Suh — ready to pounce at any moment.

"Yeah, those guys are great at what they do, and they really cut those guys loose to get after the quarterback and they've done it," Brady said. "They can really tee off on the quarterback, and they were certainly teeing off the other day."

3 Lead men

Miami quarterback Ryan Tannehill is 40 for 48 with six touchdowns and two interceptions over the last two games. That includes 18 for 19 and four touchdowns last week. The trick? Don't allow him to play with a lead. The Dolphins would like balance between the pass and run, but if the Pats jump out quickly, that'll put the ball in Tannehill's hands and out of running back Lamar Miller's hands (298 rushing yards last two weeks).
